

In my thesis I summed up the basic theoretical and practical knowledge about adaptation/integration of immigrants, integration policy and social work in the process of integration of immigrants, which I took from actual professional literature. I was also engaged in the influence of Arabic-Islamic factors in the integration process and actual situation of Islam in the Czech society. I came out of the presumption, that the members of the target group can be negatively influenced by unfair attitudes of majority and media, which usually come from the lack of information and can have specific needs and problems, on which it is necessary to react in an adequate way. By controlled structured interviews I realized pilot study into the target group, with the goal to gain information, useful for other researches and to consult the integration history of individuals, focusing on their specific needs in process of integration and forms and measure of their satisfaction and to indicate other possible fields of creation and application of integration arrangements, connected with the utilization or creation of capacities from both the side of majority society and immigrants themselves.

Integration is a complex, multidimensional and multilevel process, on which must actively and responsibly cooperate all subjects of integration. The most effective keys for integration and prevention against social exclusion is the language of the new country, professional qualification and the work participation. Immigrants must fully respect all legislation and values of the host country – in exchange to tolerance, respect, open and inclusive environment and the policy of the equal attitude and opportunities. Nongovernment nonprofit sector, regions and immigrants themselves stand the closest to real integration problems and that is why they are important partners of state in creation and realization of integration policy.
