

This thesis deals with the personality and opinions of the founder of Czech economic thought Albín Bráf. The main motive is to interpret comprehensive image of this important Czech economist. It draws near his personal life and his complicated way which he went through at searching his theoretical base. The emphasis is placed on his conception of economic theory and his attitude towards important economic issues. Further, there is described his influence on Czech economic education. The final section is devoted to economic revival as Bráf marked third part of national revival whose goal was to make Czech economy independent.