

Abstract

Transfusion is a treatment procedure that represents the transfer of blood or blood components from the bloodstream into the bloodstream of the donor-recipient patient.

Blood transfusion service ensures the quality and safety of therapeutic use of human blood and its components. In order to protect public health and prevent transmission of infectious diseases, shall take all precautionary measures during collection, processing, distribution and use of blood and blood components. Setting high standards of quality and safety of human blood to convince the public that the requirements in all countries of the European Communities. (Directive 2002 / 98/ EC)