

The work focuses at the life of prominent noblewomen in the 14th century. On the example of Catherine of Luxembourg, the daughter of Charles IV, the thesis depicts the social roles and situations of princesses throughout their course of life. These roles included the role of a daughter, wife, mother, and a widow. The princesses also served as important instruments of marriage politics. The analysis is complemented by additional information on other Czech princesses of the Luxembourg dynasty.