

The diploma thesis called "English loans in the contemporary French word-stock" deals with the concept of English loans in the French language, with their form, use and the representation in the French teen magazines. The theoretical part leans on the concept of English influence on the French language, history of mutual English - French loans and the contemporary situation. It deals equally with the question of language protection, policy and laws concerning English loans. The practical part includes the lexicological analysis of English loans, formed on the basis of the French teen magazine Phosphore. The goal of the diploma thesis is to inform French speakers about the way of penetration of English into French, to discuss the attitudes of their speakers towards the English influences and the adaptation in the French word-stock.