

The following thesis chronicles the onset of „normalization“ into the centre of Czechoslovak film industry, Barrandov Film Studios. The thesis records the changes, that came in particular areas of film developing and producing between the years 1968 – 1973, and reflects also the part of Communist party in the transformation. All the represented events are setted in the particular all-society context.