

Our highest mountain stands in front of the crucial question – in which direction will evolve its current main industry - tourism. Its form will fundamentally change both: the landscape and the economic potential of local people. The aim of my work was a description of the historical development of this area, which in many ways explains the current malaise. I have written at length about the mining and forestry, which significantly changed the local landscape and livelihood of its people.