

This bachelor theses deals with human skeletal remains discovered in the settlement of the Únětice culture near Vliněves, distr. of Mělník, during the excavations between the years 2000-2004. Individual objects are compared on the basis of contents, inventory and the method of lay out of the skelets partly with each other and partly with selected comparable samples of objects without human remains. In the appendix is an anthropological evaluation carried by MUDr. Jakub Likovský, Ph.D. from the Institute of archaeology in Prague.
