

This thesis analysis economic development in Japan in the period between the second half of 1980 s and the end of the last millennium. It reveals main factors which were responsible for the poor performance of the japanese economy in the nineties and examines macroeconomic measures adopted by the japanese government and the central bank as a response to the prolonged recession. It also analysis implications of the economic stagnation for the japanese post war economic system.