

This thesis deals with a question how the human intimacy is conceived in the novel of Jean-Philippe Toussaint La Salle de bain, and how to put this conception into continuity of changes, which have been happening in society and french literature. This novel tells a story of a young man, main character and narrator at the same time, who moves himself into a bathroom one day but after leaving it, he is returning back soon.