

The text covers the theory of the Mumford and Shah model for digital image segmentation. The strong and weak formulation is presented and the questions of existence, uniqueness, and solution regularity is answered. Then, a particular variant of the model called 'active contours without edges' is numerically implemented. This implementation is tested on several images, the results are presented in detail and theoretically explained.