

Causes and consequences of alterations of municipal plans in Prague suburb

Abstract

The diploma thesis is concerned with town and country planning after the „Velvet revolution“ in 1989. The surroundings of the capital are places where suburbanization takes place at present. Instruments, which can control the process of suburbanization, are very limited. Moreover there is a problem, that capital and its surroundings lay each in different administrative region. The municipal plan is currently key instrument by which can spatial development be influenced. Municipalities are therefore under pressure of private companies calling for extension of a built-up area. The aim of this thesis is to analyse causes and consequences of alterations of the municipal plans, which were procured in municipalities in the suburban territory of Prague, and to discover who are the main participants of these alterations.

Keywords: town and country planning, alterations of municipal plans, suburbanization