

Abstract

Title: Mother's Motivation for Attending Children Swimming courses.

Objectives: The aim of the thesis is to find and to describe mother's basic motivation incentives for voting children swimming.

Methods: This work has a descriptive character. In our work we have used non-standardized methods. These methods were applied to a nonrandom selective file of 44 mothers that, at least with one child, has completed or has just been visiting a children swimming course.

Results: Mother's main basic motivation incentives differ in reasons for attending children swimming courses. At the beginning in swimming mother mainly sees the positive influence on healthy development of children, while at the end the most important for mothers is that their children are enjoying swimming lessons. Most often the decision for swimming courses in each family make mothers, fathers rather agree with this proposal. By analysing results we can answer all setted research questions.

Keywords: children swimming, motivation, mothers.
