Abstract:

The feud for maintaining the natural and calm character of town district Klánovice has, through its medialization, reached a nationwide scale. It centers around a perpetual effort of a foreign investor to construct a golf course, which is supposed to replace a piece of forest currently serving the public as a place of recreation and relief. The feud is being held by various means beginning with persuasion of citizens and acquiring their votes, and ending with questionable intrigues and behind-the-scene conclusions. This thesis attempts to capture this cause through several theoretical planes, whereas the stress is being made on consistent narration about laws, which formed the course of the cause. This work analyses the story of Klánovice on the field of scientific disciplines of politicalology, economy and sociology. These disciplines serve as a perspective for further analysis and description of relations, values and interests of the rivalious sides in struggle for power.
