

Abstract:

An aim of the work is to consider suitability of application of the currently used stimulatory electrodes and their application in pacing. Here are processed and compared values of acute and chronic threshold of myocardium and evaluation of its development in time after the implantation. Comparison is focused on the electrodes with active and passive fixation and the results are inserted in charts.