

The Bachelor thesis "The impact of the United States of America in Nicaragua in 80's of the 20th century" deals with actions of the Reagan's administration in this state of the Central America in the years 1981 – 1988 during his presidential mandate. The bachelor thesis is supposed to be the case study of the changing understanding of the concept of non-intervention in time. It is not only the description of events, but also the evaluation from the point of view of the international law and the research of the differences in opinions of the authors as of the scientific literature, so of the press. This is followed by the analysis of the arguments of supporters and critics of the Reagan's policy. The thesis is basically divided into four parts. The first one is about the terms, which are related to the topics of the thesis and are stipulated in the international law. The following chapter provides a basic overview of events in Nicaragua in the 80's of the past century. The third part examines various arguments considered by authors as consider important, with regard to the turning point – the end of the Cold War. The final chapter analyses the reasons of the authors of the third chapter in relation to the timeline, but also to the legal documents from the first part.
