This bachelor thesis describes the relationship of people and landscape, their mutual influence in the context of history. It focuses on what instigates changes in this relationship and on artistic depiction of landscape coming out of it. During chronological mapping of human history and the landscape is the work of several seemingly disparate findings, but then here they reveal their logical context.

The analysis takes mainly from an environmental perspective. Also it reminds of the current civilization problem which is moving away from nature and presents a solution in building a relationship between children and nature through visual arts. In this thesis a specific realization of classes on this topic is described, properly prepared for instruction in regular classrooms of urban schools.

Furthermore a relationship and approach to landscape is reflected in author's creations using several techniques in the artistic part the choice is justified by the text.
