

Abstract

The way men and women enter municipal politics of Kutná Hora. This work focuses on the motivation and the reasons why men and women enter municipal politics in a medium-sized city such as Kutná Hora. I put emphasis on issues of participation in the political representation of both sexes. What are the obstacles to municipal politicians to meet at the entrance to the politics and the active participation in political office.

I introduced myself to municipal politics in the Czech Republic and what powers and responsibilities councilors in the city have.

In the empirical part, I introduced our own research and put a short excursion into the history of Kutná Hora. Data obtained through interviews with municipal politicians and politicians were analyzed through three levels of coding. I started from the thesis of Marcela Adamusová, which dealt with master suppression techniques and compared my results with her.

Keywords: women, men, gender, municipal politics, local government of Kutná Hora, councilors, master suppression techniques, political representation, barriers.
