Príloha č. 3 - Humanitárna intervencia v. medzinárodný mier a bezpečnosť

The diagram below illustrates some of the possible inherent dilemmas in the form of a hierarchy of values, with an indication of logical (dotted lines) and causal (arrows) connections:

Negative and positive peace, however, have quite different - perhaps even conflicting - implications:

- Negative peace calls for disarmament combined with provisions for collective security. One path to disarmament that will not increase the risk of war is a defensive restructuring of the armed forces, to be implemented unilaterally or via arms control. A relevant guideline for this process is the concept of non-offensive defence (NOD), more about which below.
- Positive peace calls for development, hence also for disarmament that may allow for a reallocation of resources from military to civilian needs. It also calls for a political transformation, the gist of which may be captured by the slogan of 'global governance'. Global governance may, if only in extreme cases, call for military interventions.

Both the attainment of negative and positive peace call for an expanded role for the United Nations as the most appropriate (and only legitimate) framework for global governance, responsible for a reallocation of resources to development purposes, as well as for collective security and humanitarian interventions*.
