

The theses is focused on the work with deprived families with concentration on the method of family cure an its application in the City of Most. It is work which is based on combination of theoretical and empirical access to the problem which leads to proposal of practical application of the method in praxis. The document is structured in six chapters. The first chapter follows the term „family“ as the basic cathegory of the issue. The second chapter deals with the theme of deprived family, which represents the target group of the cure process. Besides the basic terms explanation this chapter includes also analysis of the present state of the work with family in our country and in some other european countries. The third chapter is already focused on the term family rescue. Besides of term definition it is concentrated on aims, processes and methods in use and on the legislative framework. The fourth chapter analyses situation in the field of family rescue method and its application in current system of work with deprived families and introduces to reader modern methods promising for the future. The fifth chapter concerns on social services system which is on disposal with family rescue with emphasis on services of social actuation for families with children. The last chapter represents the project proposal on introduction of family cure method in the City of Most. In conclusion are all the theoretical and practical findings summarised and the practical benefits of the theses are stressed.