

This work analyzes the possibilities of division of combinatorial problems that occur in mathematical competitions. It contains presentation of Combinatorics taught at secondary schools. It shows the differences between solving problems in schools and math competitions. Using graphs and tables, it demonstrates an unbalanced distribution of combinatorial problems. In conclusion, it offers some types of examples that are missing in competitions, or are there in insufficient numbers.