

Abstract

The present work deals with the events of the Irish War of Independence between the Irish nationalists and the British government in the period 1919-1921 and their reflection in contemporary Czechoslovak press.

The work also included a chapter devoted each other understanding, followed by contacts, visits and relationship interdependence among citizens of the island and the citizens of the Czech lands. For an idea of how different circles of Czech society they thought about the Irish question is an example display of Czechoslovak newspapers, the extent to which different layers of the Czechoslovak society of events in the British islands informed.

Work processes, to what extent the war mentioned in the Czechoslovak press, what information is given to the Czechoslovak reporters, how specific events devoted to printing, if the Czechoslovak nation supported the Irish effort, and whether the reportage reflects a comparison with the events of the Czech struggle for independence.

Key words:

Irish War of Independence, the Czech-Irish relations, the Irish question, Home Rule, the Czechoslovak press