

Abstract

The thesis “Changes of farming types during transition period: case study ORP Kralovice” deals with Czech agriculture and with the complex development, which this branch experienced before and after the year 1989. Its objective is to capture and analyze significant changes of farming types in the case area.

At first, the thesis observes the development of agriculture in Czechia before and after 1989. It describes processes of transition of agricultural cooperatives and privatization of state property (state farms). The thesis also describes the case area, its conditions, strengths and weaknesses for agricultural production.

Finally, both the transition and also the privatization, are presented by particular examples of businesses from the case area. The thesis focuses on their development from 1989 to the present day.