

This work deals with issues of Czech borrowings in the Polish language and the research of Polish scholars in this field of study. Its purpose is to collect and attempt to critically evaluate Polish professional literature dealing with these problems. The initial chapter shows a brief outlook on the history of Czech- Polish language relations, and subsequently it gives attention to chronological order of individual periods of interest of the Polish linguistics in the field of study of Czech borrowings. In the following chapters several chosen works of the Polish scholars who contributed the most to development of this area of study are described and critically evaluated in accordance with the students current state of knowledge. Corresponding literature has been assorted in three groups: 1. Complete works dealing with history and development of Polish language. Here a special attention has been dedicated to works of Zenon Klemensiewicz (2002) and Stanisław Urbańczyk (1979), 2. Monographs and essays dealing directly with the issues of Czech borrowings. Here works of Janusz Siatkowski (1965, 1970 and 1996), Marian Kucała (1973) and Mieczysław Bałowski (2005) has been described 3. Etymological and encyclopedic dictionaries.
