

Abstract (in English):

Author of this thesis analyses everyday life of the British infantrymen during the Peninsular war in the years 1807 – 1814. Considering the large scale this topic, the author decided to focus only on specific aspects. On the base of it, the thesis is divided to four chapters. First chapter deals with general diplomatic and military context, second chapter deals with everyday life of British soldiers on British Isles, which means recruiting, drill and quartering. Third chapter deals with marches, camping and sickness rate. In fourth chapter there is short analysis of the British infantry tactics. Author also tries to analyse “battle experience” of British soldiers. Last chapter deals with wounds and their cure.
