

Abstract

Bachelor thesis „Social policy of the Czech Republic in relation to families with disabled children and its effectiveness in the fight against social exclusion“ deals with the problem of the risk of social exclusion of families who take care of the disabled children. The theoretical part contains a summary of theoretical concepts and values which bind to the topic, and includes the conceptualization of terms that are the subject of this thesis essential. In the analytical part are defined the main instrument of social policy in the Czech republic in relation to families with disabled children and based on interviews with concrete families there is an assessment of the social security system of families with disabled children from the perspective of its users. Based on interviews are also identified the main problems which families with disabled children face. The conducted research shows that families who take care of disabled children are faced with many problems especially existential and the social help system of families with disabled children does not sufficiently protect against the risk of social exclusion of mentioned families.