

TITLE:

Family and an education of values

AUTHOR:

Barbora Hancová

DEPARTMENT:

Department of Primary Education

SUPERVISOR:

PaedDr. Jana Havlová

Abstract:

The main topic of the thesis is the education of values. The objective was to explore which values are typical / natural within a family. The thesis confirmed that values play a significant role in families and they are mostly transferred from generation to generation.

The theoretical part of the thesis is focusing on the clarification of the terms, such as values, system of values, needs. The values were then put in the context of a family, school and a child itself. It also deals with the topic of children's law, which is closely related to values.

The practical part of the thesis is describing the process of the research, including the data resulting from the questionnaire survey that only included parents from the Czech Republic, without taking into consideration the age, profession or the place of living. The questionnaire, besides other things, deals with a personal list of values, as well as a list of values used by parents when bringing up their children, and it presents the results. The aim of the questionnaire was to find out how parents understand the importance of values and which list of values is typical of them. The results of the research were recorded verbally, as well as by graph, and their summary is included at the end of the thesis. The research shows that the most important value, according to the personal priorities and regardless the age and sex, is the value of health. The most important value in men in connection with a child was the value of honesty and in women the value of love.

Keywords:

Values, the system values, needs, child, family, school, teacher