

This bachelor thesis aims to provide an analysis of the novel „Homo Faber“ by Max Frisch and compare the novel with its film version. The focus will be given to depiction of typical social behaviour and mental processes of key characters contrasting the general features of typical women and typical men. One of the aims of this work is to evaluate which of the two media – book or film – is more convenient as a means of transgression of the information in question.