

The master's thesis focuses on one aspect of public procurement law in the Czech Republic. Specifically, it provides with thorough interpretation of the Czech legal regulation of conditions allowing for using negotiated procedure with prior notice or negotiated procedure without prior notice to award a public tender. In order to achieve such purpose, the thesis uses information from the 137/2006 Coll., Public Procurement Act, as amended, available doctrinal literature and case law of the Office for the Protection of Competition, Czech courts and the European Court of Justice. The interpretation is performed to compare the Czech regulation with the one contained in relevant European directives (2004/17/EC, 2004/18/EC and 2009/81/EC). After interpretation of these directives focused majorly on differences from the Czech law, the thesis provides conclusions about correctness of transposition of the directives into Czech legal system, which is the core of its focus.
