

Barbora Fialová

The Foreign Policy of John Major's Cabinet (1990-1997). Contribution to the History of the Island State in the 1990s

Master's Thesis – the Abstract

The master's thesis deals with a period of John Major's conservative government in the Great Britain (1990–1997). Main interest of this thesis is a foreign policies' analysis of the Major's government. Primarily, it puts an emphasis on a development of relationships with the European Communities and later the European Union. Nevertheless, it also deals with the relationship with the United States or with the Commonwealth of Nations. Moreover, the personality of John Major and his impact on British foreign policies is studied. Major's government's domestic policies were influenced by foreign policies and vice versa, the key factors are described in the thesis. The author uses mainly British sources and literature.