

The submitted master's thesis deals with two significant Western African languages, Hausa and Barbara, and compares their grammatical systems, or, more precisely, how both languages express the verb categories of time, aspect and modality (TAM for short). By thus comparing both languages, one can point out the structural and semantic concord and differences of Barbara and Hausa, and so contribute to finding a solution to the issue.