

Abstract

This bachelor thesis deals with the issue of couple relationships at work, it pays attention to those relationships when both a boyfriend and a girlfriend or married couples meet each other at the same workplace. The aim is to find out how people in this case reflect the interactions between professional and private life. First part of the thesis describes important concepts and theories. Author of the thesis analyses interpersonal relationships in the first place, she shows how they are treated in literature and what is the effect of the relationships to the organisation functioning. At the same time she mentions relating researches both from abroad and the Czech Republic. The author's own research is also a part of the bachelor thesis. Based on 16 interviews with respondents, who are in a relationship while working together, the author comes with a summarization of their ideas about a relationship with someone from work, she describes its particularities from the view of the participants themselves, and she also notes that such relationships seem to be less problematic than it is presented in the specialized literature.