

Abstract

The thesis investigates the functions of memory media (photography and narration) throughout the different phases in the process of memory formation. This subject is explored using the example of memory situations in Peter Henisch's novel Die kleine Figur meines Vaters. Special attention is given to the differences in memory media during the development of the generational conflict in Austria and in Germany in the 1960s.