

Abstract

This thesis aims, based on the available literature and printed and archival sources, to understand the development and changes of the economic relations of Czechoslovakia and Japan in the period of 1918-1938, therefore during the existence of The First Czechoslovak Republic. Emphasis is placed on the analysis of institutional background of Czechoslovak export to the Land of the Rising Sun (both the state and the private) and the interpretation of entry barriers with a view of eliminating them. The methodological approach is based on the theory of international trade and on the structural and the institutional analysis, which corresponds to the division of the text into relevant chapters. The issue is examined from the perspective of The First Czechoslovak Republic and the sources of Japanese origin were not used.