

The main topic of my bachelor's work, are reasons of addiction to methamphetamine. The goal is to find out the most common and most important reasons why young people, aged from twenty-five to thirty-three years living in the small village Dobronín, became addicted to methamphetamine. First, the thesis deals with drugs, with their division, as well as with deeper information about methamphetamine and specifics of addiction to methamphetamine. The important part of my work are chapters about the causes of addiction, factors that increase the risk of addiction and factors that increase resistance to addiction. Part of the work is also devoted to drug prevention. At the end of the work, there is the questionnaire survey. The results of this survey correspond to the goal of my work. The influence of friends, curiosity and the influence of the environment and the place where they lived were the most common and most important reasons why young people started to take drugs.
