

Abstract

Bachelor thesis Austrian Green Party and its role in Austrian fight against Nuclear Power Plant Temelín concerns relationship between Austrian Federation and the Czech Republic within the field of the nuclear industry; namely it concerns the situation around the building and lately planned completion of constructing of the Czech nuclear power plant Temelín. Primarily, the thesis tries to analyse an Austrian green party Die Grünen - Die grüne Alternative attitude and its communication of the Temelín problematic in years 2004-2013, when both countries have been member countries of the European Union. At first, thesis introduces the issue and main participants. At the very beginning it describes Temelín building itself, including the fear connected with its building and lately with its existence and completion. After that it summarizes the development of Austrian Greens and it analyses their party materials in which we can find anti-nuclear topics. Then it describes attitude of the main Austrian political parties to a nuclear theme. In the crucial part it also analyses, except the communication of Die Grünen on federal and supranational level, the behaviour of the local Green Party offices in individual Austrian lands and evaluated their orientation towards Temelín. It uses the materials which are available on Die Grünen' websites.
