

Resumé in English

In the first chapter, author of the thesis focused on history and creation of the term „civil disobedience“

Second chapter was focused on different views on what term civil disobedience actually means and how some of the famous legal theoreticians as John Rawls, Hannah Arendt and Ronald Dworkin understand it.

In the third chapter, there was specification of the term civil disobedience in all its theoretical aspects in context of polemics with all the different views in previous chapter.

Fourth chapter was focused on civil disobedience in democracy and its role, specifics arising from the nature of democracy.

In the fifth chapter author was focused on specifics and nature of civil disobedience in non-democratic states together with mentioning a few examples from history.

Sixth chapter compared effects and mutual influence of violent or non-violent civil disobedience and its effectivity.

In the seventh chapter, author described in more detail one of the examples of civil disobedience in the Czech Republic which was decided by court, for describing how the process works in real life situations.
