

The aim of this bachelor work is to present the work of Adolph Kolping's. Attention is given especially to specific principles of Kolping's work with endangered families. The aim of this work is to present and to track down these principles in present days. The work is divided into four parts. The first one is the theoretical part that focuses on the characteristics of Kolping's work. The next one is a chapter devoted to the characteristics of contemporary family, its functions and support. The following chapter describes the arrangement of Kolping's facilities, his house and his social services for endangered families. The practical part is devoted to Kolping's principles applied in practice. The main contribution of Kolping's principles for endangered families is acquiring of skills and abilities needed for families to overcome difficult social situation.