

This bachelor's thesis describes the relation between social work and sustainability on the background of the global problem of food wasting. This particular problem is referred through variety of ecological organizations, initiatives and alternative ways of life in the cities, such as composting, urban gardening or dumpster diving. It critically evaluates the specific form of Czech environment and its impact on this problem.