

The thesis focuses on the analysis of the institutional background for the inter-war Czechoslovak-Japanese economic relations. It also focuses on the interpretation of external economic relations of Czechoslovak republic with Japan and takes into account the presence of entry barriers in the context of efforts to eliminate them. Methodological approach is based on the theory of international trade, and structural and institutional analysis, which divides the text into relevant chapters.