

Abstract

This Master's thesis focuses on viewpoints of four Scout generations regarding the Czechoslovakia Scouting movement ideals after 1945. The research revolves around the 18th centre Kruh in Prague. The thesis studies transformation of Scouting ideals, as well as leadership and event programme. It employs oral history methodology, with narrators coming from the 18th centre Kruh. The aim of the thesis is not to delve into great detail regarding the development and history of the centre, but rather to explore ways that Scouts used to adapt to their respective political and social situations. The thesis also investigates ways of keeping traditions alive and generational continuity.
