

We implement a MACE-style method for finding finite models in unsorted classical first-order logic. Additionally to well-known modifications of the method we also describe and implement several new modifications such as: unflattening, generation of redundant clauses and encoding into Gecode constraints. Our implementation is benchmarked together with Mace4, Paradox and iProver. Finally, some suggestions for improvements and further research are given.