

This paper uses phenomenographical interview to explore subjective experience of nine people with mental handicap - they are led to speak by indirective questions only. It is based on humanistically orientated phenomenological approach which emphasizes uniqueness and specific value of each personality. The research method used is an autobiographical technique.

The paper should be a contribution to newly appreciate the real personality in mentally handicapped people. It attempts to bring some new nexuses and new dimensions of thinking in the topic or if possible to reveal the wide potential for additional research as well.
