

ABSTRACT

The thesis deals with state social support as part of the Czech social security system.

The thesis is divided into an introduction, a conclusion and six chapters. The first chapter is concerned with the social security system and its subsystems; the second one with factors affecting the social security system; the third chapter deals with social events; the fourth one deals with the problems relating to the main goals of the social security system and social rights; the fifth chapter deals with the fundamental questions related to state social support; the last chapter deals with problems facing state social support cards. Even though state social support is sometimes too dynamic and has some issues, it is still a very good system. Any changes have to be done with special care for preserving the principles of social justice.
