

This bachelor thesis deals with problems of doping in sport. It conceives doping as a lie not only about athletes themselves but even to the whole society. It is focused on doping as an ethical problem. Ethical aspects of doping are often disregarded by the society because doping is more commonly looked upon as a health risk associated with using forbidden substances in sport. The bachelor thesis also describes the link between doping and young people – a recent problem which needs to be tackled. At the end the bachelor thesis introduces possible prevention concerning forbidden substances in sport as an important topic in contemporary times.
