

Abstract

The aim of my bachelor thesis „Supported Employment as an Instrument of Social Inclusion“ is analyzing the service for people who want to search and keep a paid job in the open labour market. The target group of the service needs a professional support to find a job because of their disability or their social situation.

The theoretical part of the thesis deals with principles, establishment and representation of the service Supported Employment in the Czech Republic. The theoretical part of the thesis also deals with issues of disability, mechanisms of integration into society, the right to work and be employed, issues of unemployment and tools of active labour market policy.

The practical part is based on results by the author. The situation of people who use the service of Supported Employment and people who do not have experience with this service is compared.
