

Abstract:

The bachelor thesis focuses on possible working methods and interventions for non-imprisoned juvenile delinquents. The part of the literature review summarizes current knowledge on this issue. The current situation of juvenile delinquency and an area of legislation are also mentioned as well as possibilities of residential placement facilities and differences in needs compared to the general population of adolescents. The core part of the thesis focuses on the current options of working methods with children for a purpose the most effective resocialization and minimizing recidivism. The thesis also contains the project of research, which is thematically linked to the literature review. It is quantitative research focused on exploration of interventions effect on one of the human characteristics, which is important in the process of behavior, on the locus of control.

Key words: juvenile delinquents interventions, institutional care, correctional care, juvenile offenders recidivism, locus of control