

Abstract

The migration crisis theme has today become one of the biggest problems of today's Europe. Further development of migration crisis could therefore decide about the end of Europe in a form in which is known today because due to the occurrence of crisis there are more callings for the end of European Union – Czech Republic is no exception. The topic of this thesis is analysis of stances of Czech parliamentary parties on the subject of migration in years 2013-2016. Research will begin before the start of migration crisis in order to compare stance of parties on migration before and after the start of migration crisis. The introductory chapter presents the term migration and its connected topics as multiculturalism or rising populism. In this chapter there are further included topics related to Czech political scene when part is about actual relationship of Czech parties to European Union and part is concerned about Czech parliamentary election in 2013. The second chapter is dedicated to the analysis of stances of political parties on migration in an aspect of security which involves proposed steps of political parties in e.g. security policy of the state. The third chapter is concerned about the relation of political parties to Europe, or more precisely European Union, which is in consequence of migration crisis criticized also in Czech Republic. Last chapter is concerned with stance of parties on migration with cultural aspect, because migrants coming to Europe have different culture and they mostly profess Islam.