

Abstract

This thesis focuses on the analysis of the “male world” in late Victorian England. The main theme is the evaluation of an everyday life of middle-classes men. The thesis focuses on their education opportunities, but also on the family and family relationships. Furthermore, the thesis deals with the question of leisure time and its spending with or without family, especially in gentleman's clubs. The study of specialized literature allowed me to examine the changing position of men during the 19th century not only in the middle classes but also in other social classes. The changing lifestyle offered new opportunities and challenges both in the workplace and in family life.