

Abstract

Social security of people with disabilities

The thesis deals with social security of people with disabilities. Its aim is to analyse the legislation valid for the Czech republic and its implementation in real life situations.

The thesis consists of six chapters. The first chapter aims to clarify basic terminology necessary to fully understand issues of social security of people with disabilities that will be used throughout the thesis. The second chapter is devoted to legal sources, that deal with social security of people with disabilities focused on provisions of international law, national and European Union law. The third chapter describes social security of people with disabilities within the realms of "Pension Insurance Act". It discusses various levels of disability pensions and the proces of health assesment in detail. Issues of management and further organization of pension insurance. The fourth chapter focuses on non-insurance social benefits for people with disabilities. It further describes the management and organization of these benefits. The fifth chapter deals with care allowance for the disabled intended to cover costs of necessary social services. It also describes the proces of legal proceedings for granting the allowance and its organization. Chapter six describes the legislation of sections of private law, labor law and financial law dealing with social security of people with disabilities. It further discusses employment of people with disabilities, tax relief and exemption from local fees applicable for people with disabilities and the activities of legal entities of private law facilitating social security of people with disabilities - foundations and endowment funds.